

Growing numbers have become concerned over media consolidation. We wish to avoid such concentrated power over the exchange of ideas, information and points-of-view, the diversity of which is crucial to our democratic process.

Unfortunately, when Sinclair stations in 24 states air a documentary attacking John Kerry because their business goals conflict with his ideas of free speech, our fears about media conglomeration are confirmed.

If monopolies over the manufacture of gadgets concern us, the conduct of Sinclair Broadcasting should be taken far more seriously.

Sinclair should either not be allowed to air political propaganda, especially this close to an election, or they should be made to give equal time, during prime time, to the opposing viewpoints.

Thank you.
